

Extra Alt+Letter Macros

Tips

I use Alt+letter macros and often found myself running out of keys to use – until now. Here's a tip that shows you how to add several Alt+letter macros to your list without having to create a new keyboard every time you use all of the Alt+letter keys.

The included ALTA.WPM macro makes it easy. You can rename the macro to any other Alt+letter combination, but its name must be in that format.

Next, you must either create a macro or rename an existing macro to AA.WPM, AB.WPM, etc. (This assumes that you are keeping the ALTA.WPM name of my macro.)

Note: Do this for as many macros as you need up to 26 macros, giving them each a unique name. You can name them whatever second character you want, but the first character must be the letter A.

Now play my macro by pressing (Alt+A). The macro prompts you to type the second character of your named macro. So, if you named your newly-created or existing macro AA.WPM, type "a" to execute it. If your macro is named AB.WPM, type "b." And so forth.

If you use an Alt+letter combination different from ALTA.WPM, you must create or rename existing macros accordingly. For example, if you prefer to name my macro ALTB.WPM, then you must name your other macros BA.WPM, BB.WPM, etc.
